Biographical Note

"Labours of love don't necessarily make for a good read which is why I cry Bravo! to Ida Hay for writing such an enjoyable account of one of the temperate world's great gardens."

Ida Hay, 1995

Born in Philadelphia in 1948, Ida Hay received a BA in botany from Swarthmore College in 1970. While pursuing her degree, she was the Horticultural Assistant at the Arthur Hoyt Scott Horticultural Foundation in 1967 and 1968. A member of the Arnold Arboretum's staff from 1970 to 1993, Hay's primary work at the Arboretum was as Manager of the Herbarium in Jamaica Plain. Hay, who also published under the name Ida Hay Burch, is the author of numerous articles in Arnoldia including George Barrell Emerson and the Establishment of the Arnold Arboretum and was coauthor in 1979 with Stephen Spongberg of "Lardizabalaceae Hardy in Temperate North America" which was published in the Journal of the Arnold Arboretum.

Consisting of primary and secondary research material on the history of the Arnold Arboretum collected and assembled by Hay from 1981 until 1993 the collection for Science In The Pleasure Ground: A History of the Arnold Arboretum includes: accounts of the Arboretum's beginnings, early uses of land, the Bussey Institution, material about the concept of an arboretum and the development of a privately defined public space, Frederick Law Olmsted, the Arboretum's design, construction, plantings and plant explorations, descriptions of staff members and their roles. Also included is correspondence with Northeastern University Press, reviewers' notes, unbound, annotated manuscript proofs, as well manuscript review notes by Mildred E. Mathias (1906-1995), and photographs and their corresponding negatives of images used in the publication.

In her preface Hay notes that the book was written to “reveal the stories behind the scenery of this intricate garden” and it brings to life the engaging personalities whose leadership and creativity made the Arnold Arboretum a world renowned institution. In Hay’s estimation “They all have had the patience, tenacity, and optimism needed to raise trees and complete encyclopedic tasks.” Her book also documents the development of scientific knowledge and portrays the Arboretum’s unique blending of scientific inquiry into woody plants with the recreational and aesthetic values of a green oasis created in an urban setting.

Science in the Pleasure Ground (1995) is the third book in the series that includes A Reunion of Trees (1990) by Stephen A. Spongberg and New England Natives (1994), by Sheila Connor that was supported and championed by Peter Shaw Ashton (1934-) Director of the Arnold Arboretum 1978-1987. The concept for the series evolved from a number of discussions held by staff members that explored how the nature, content and arrangement of the Arboretum’s living collections of trees and shrubs might be best interpreted for visitors. The series was funded for planning in 1981 and for completion in 1984 and 1987 with grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities, which recognized the value of the Arnold Arboretum’s landscape as a resource and repository of both cultural and natural history.

Much of the material and information Hay collected was also used to inform the content and design of an interactive, multifaceted exhibition featuring an 8’x16’ scale model of the Arboretum landscape which was also entitled “Science in the Pleasure Ground.” The exhibit was installed in the Hunnewell Building in 1996 in celebration of the Arboretum’s 125th anniversary.
