Abstract: The collection of the Records of the Children's Education Programs - Community Science Connection, 1994-2000, contains institutional records, educational records, correspondence, and visual materials pertaining to and generated by the Community Science Connection (CSC), a children's education program at the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University. The Community Science Connection was a National Science Foundation (NSF) grant-funded science education program for elementary students in the greater Boston area. The program was conceived of and managed by Candace Julyan, the Project Director of Community Science Connection, and was a collaborative effort between the Arnold Arboretum and numerous Boston-area schools and teachers. The records directly generated by the Community Science Connection date from 1995 to 1998, the years of the program's existence and the bulk of this collection, and the records relating to the foundations and conclusions of the program date from 1994 to 2000.

Note: Access to Finding Aid record in Hollis Classic or Hollis.

Preferred Citation: Records of the Children's Education Programs - Community Science Connection, 1994-2000. Archives of the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University.

Additional Material: Photographs related to CSC are available in the collection I G-2: Children's Education in various analog and digital formats. For access to these collections please contact library staff.

Historical Note

The Community Science Connection (CSC) was a National Science Foundation (NSF) grant-funded science education program for elementary school students in the greater Boston area, namely in the cities of Boston, Brookline, and Newton. The program was conceived of and managed by Candace Julyan, who was the Project Director of the Community Science Connection, along with Arboretum staff member Diane Syverson, who had strong contacts with area schools from her previous work.

Starting in February of 1995 with a NSF grant of $1.2 million, the Community Science Connection first sought to educate and prepare the twenty-six teachers in the Boston area who applied and were accepted by the project staff. These initial twenty-six teachers who worked with the Community Science Connection in 1995 were termed "CSC Cohort 1", or just "Cohort 1", by Julyan and her staff. "Cohort 2" pertains to teachers who worked with the Community Science Connection from 1996 to 1997. Julyan and her staff also ran the CSC Summer Institute during the summer vacations of the years of the program's operation in order to prepare incoming teachers for the goals and activities of the Community Science Connection. Thus, the Community Science Connection was a collaborative effort between the Arnold Arboretum and numerous schools and teachers in Boston, Brookline, and Newton.

An important purpose of this science education program at the Arboretum was to incorporate computer technology into the educational and communicational activities of the program. This incorporation of computer technology included use of the Internet to send e-mails, write thread discussions, and input and handle data.

The Community Science Connection ran Seasonal Investigations of Trees, educational activities in which students and teachers would make direct observations of trees on the Arboretum grounds in the fall, winter, and spring. Students would use this information to complete class activities mostly using the online system established by Julyan, and some of this work (writing, data, and artwork) was given to the Arboretum by specific schools or classes. Another educational activity was the Schoolyard Tree activity which employed similar work but in relation to trees on each respective school's property.

The Community Science Connection also pursued and established collaborations with the Polly Hill Arboretum in West Tisbury, Massachusetts, from 1996 to 1997, and the Massachusetts Audubon Society in Lincoln, Massachusetts, from 1997 to 1998, for institutional connection and public outreach.

In 1998, the four funded years of the project came to an end, and with that came the conclusion of Candace Julyan's project directorship. Since then, the Arboretum has continued to run other children's education programs.

Scope and Content

The 1994-2000 records contain all information pertaining to the planning, activities, and completion of the Community Science Connection while the 1995-1998 records (bulk) contain information generated by the Community Science Connection. The collection includes institutional records (planning notes, overviews, proposals, reports, meeting minutes/notes, bills and invoices, payments), educational materials (classwork, data, online discussions), correspondence interspersed in folders alongside associated records (mail, email), and visual materials (photographs, negatives, contact sheets, slides.)

Arrangement

The collection is arranged in 7 series with Series 3 arranged into 6 subseries. Each folder is arranged in an internal chronological order. Papers that are undated but are not within their own, independent folder are placed at the back of dated materials within folders. Correspondence that is not within its own folder is interspersed with associated papers.
